

BERLIN EXPORT

Peter de Chamier

This novel is set in 2004 in Basel, Cairo, the Libyan desert – reminiscences of Budapest in the 1950s and East Berlin in the 1970s – Madrid, Andalusia, and Tuscany ... as the world turns. It is featuring Jack Boulder, his friend Laszlo Nagy and his companion Malcsi, Herr Schall – Jack Boulder's friend Annabel Conti, et al.

OCCIDENT EXPRESS

Peter de Chamier

The year is 2006 – Russia and its billionaires promise riches and an auspicious future, for many the country has become the land of the rising sun, not least for German media czars and politicians. It begins with an accident in Greece, follows manhunts along dusty railroad tracks in the Middle East, and ends with a furniture truck in Switzerland.

More at www.de-chamier.com

The documents had disappeared a long time ago, but my contact at the German Foreign Office was sure that I would retrieve them.

1936. Germany and Japan sign a treaty with two oil companies: The two countries divide among each other the oil exploitation in Siberia. In exchange, they renounce all interests in oil in most other parts of the world in favor of these companies.

The diplomatic courier carrying the German version of the treaty from Tokyo to Berlin disappears traveling on the Trans-Siberian Railroad while crossing the Soviet Union.

2002. Nearly seventy years later, Jack Boulder, a Canadian living in the Swiss city of Basel, is asked to trace the original copy of the treaty by the German Foreign Office.

What is so important about an agreement that is outdated? Why does a German government office offer so much money for this task if they know exactly whom to ask for its whereabouts?

Soon Boulder realizes that certain parts of the puzzle are not foreign to him. Driven by curiosity he follows the trails of the unnamed forces through Germany, Switzerland, Sweden, the United States and Russia – and the forces follow him.

The circle closes in Siberia. Who gets the Russian oil? Who finances the pipelines? Who receives the money?

Special edition
Not for sale/resale

A TWINTREE™
PUBLICATION

Peter de Chamier • Unnamed Forces

Peter de Chamier

UNNAMED FORCES

Peter de Chamier has a doctorate in history and works for an international scientific and humanitarian foundation.

The author has written and edited a number of non-fiction books that were translated into seven languages. He has contributed numerous newspaper articles for the culture and arts sections of several leading newspapers, and has a regular column in a scientific news magazine.

de Chamier's novels are written in the form of the political thriller, morally neutral – still moral, vigilant, full of suspense, tongue in cheek, and based on solid factual and historical foundations.